NORTON FOLGATE

Opportunities to Blossom

Designed by Stirling Prize winning architect AHMM, BLOSSOM YARD is the beating heart of the redeveloped Norton Folgate. At the top of it all sit two floors of penthouse workspace, offering expansive views across the City and Spitalfields from the 9th floor terrace, and extensive opportunities for company branding in the impressive reception area.

This is contemporary space that draws on the site's long history of human ingenuity and imagination. Having previously been a source of sustenance for Spitalfields Priory and entertainment for thrill-seeking Victorians, now its light-filled workspace, generous communal areas, central courtyard for a moment of calm, and all-day restaurant will provide a source of inspiration for London's creative thinking businesses.

BLOSSOM YARD

An area of reinvention

THE HISTORY OF BLOSSOM YARD is far older than the cobblestones and Victorian warehouses of Blossom Street. People have lived, worked and worshipped on this site for thousands of years.

This is where, in the first century, the Romans came to bury their dead, beyond the walls of Londinium. This is where, in medieval times, all of the food and drink for the monks, lay sisters and patients of St Mary Spital would have been grown, baked and brewed. And from 1890 onwards, this is where glassblowers Nicholls & Clarke started buying up and building their vast empire of showrooms, workshops and warehouses.

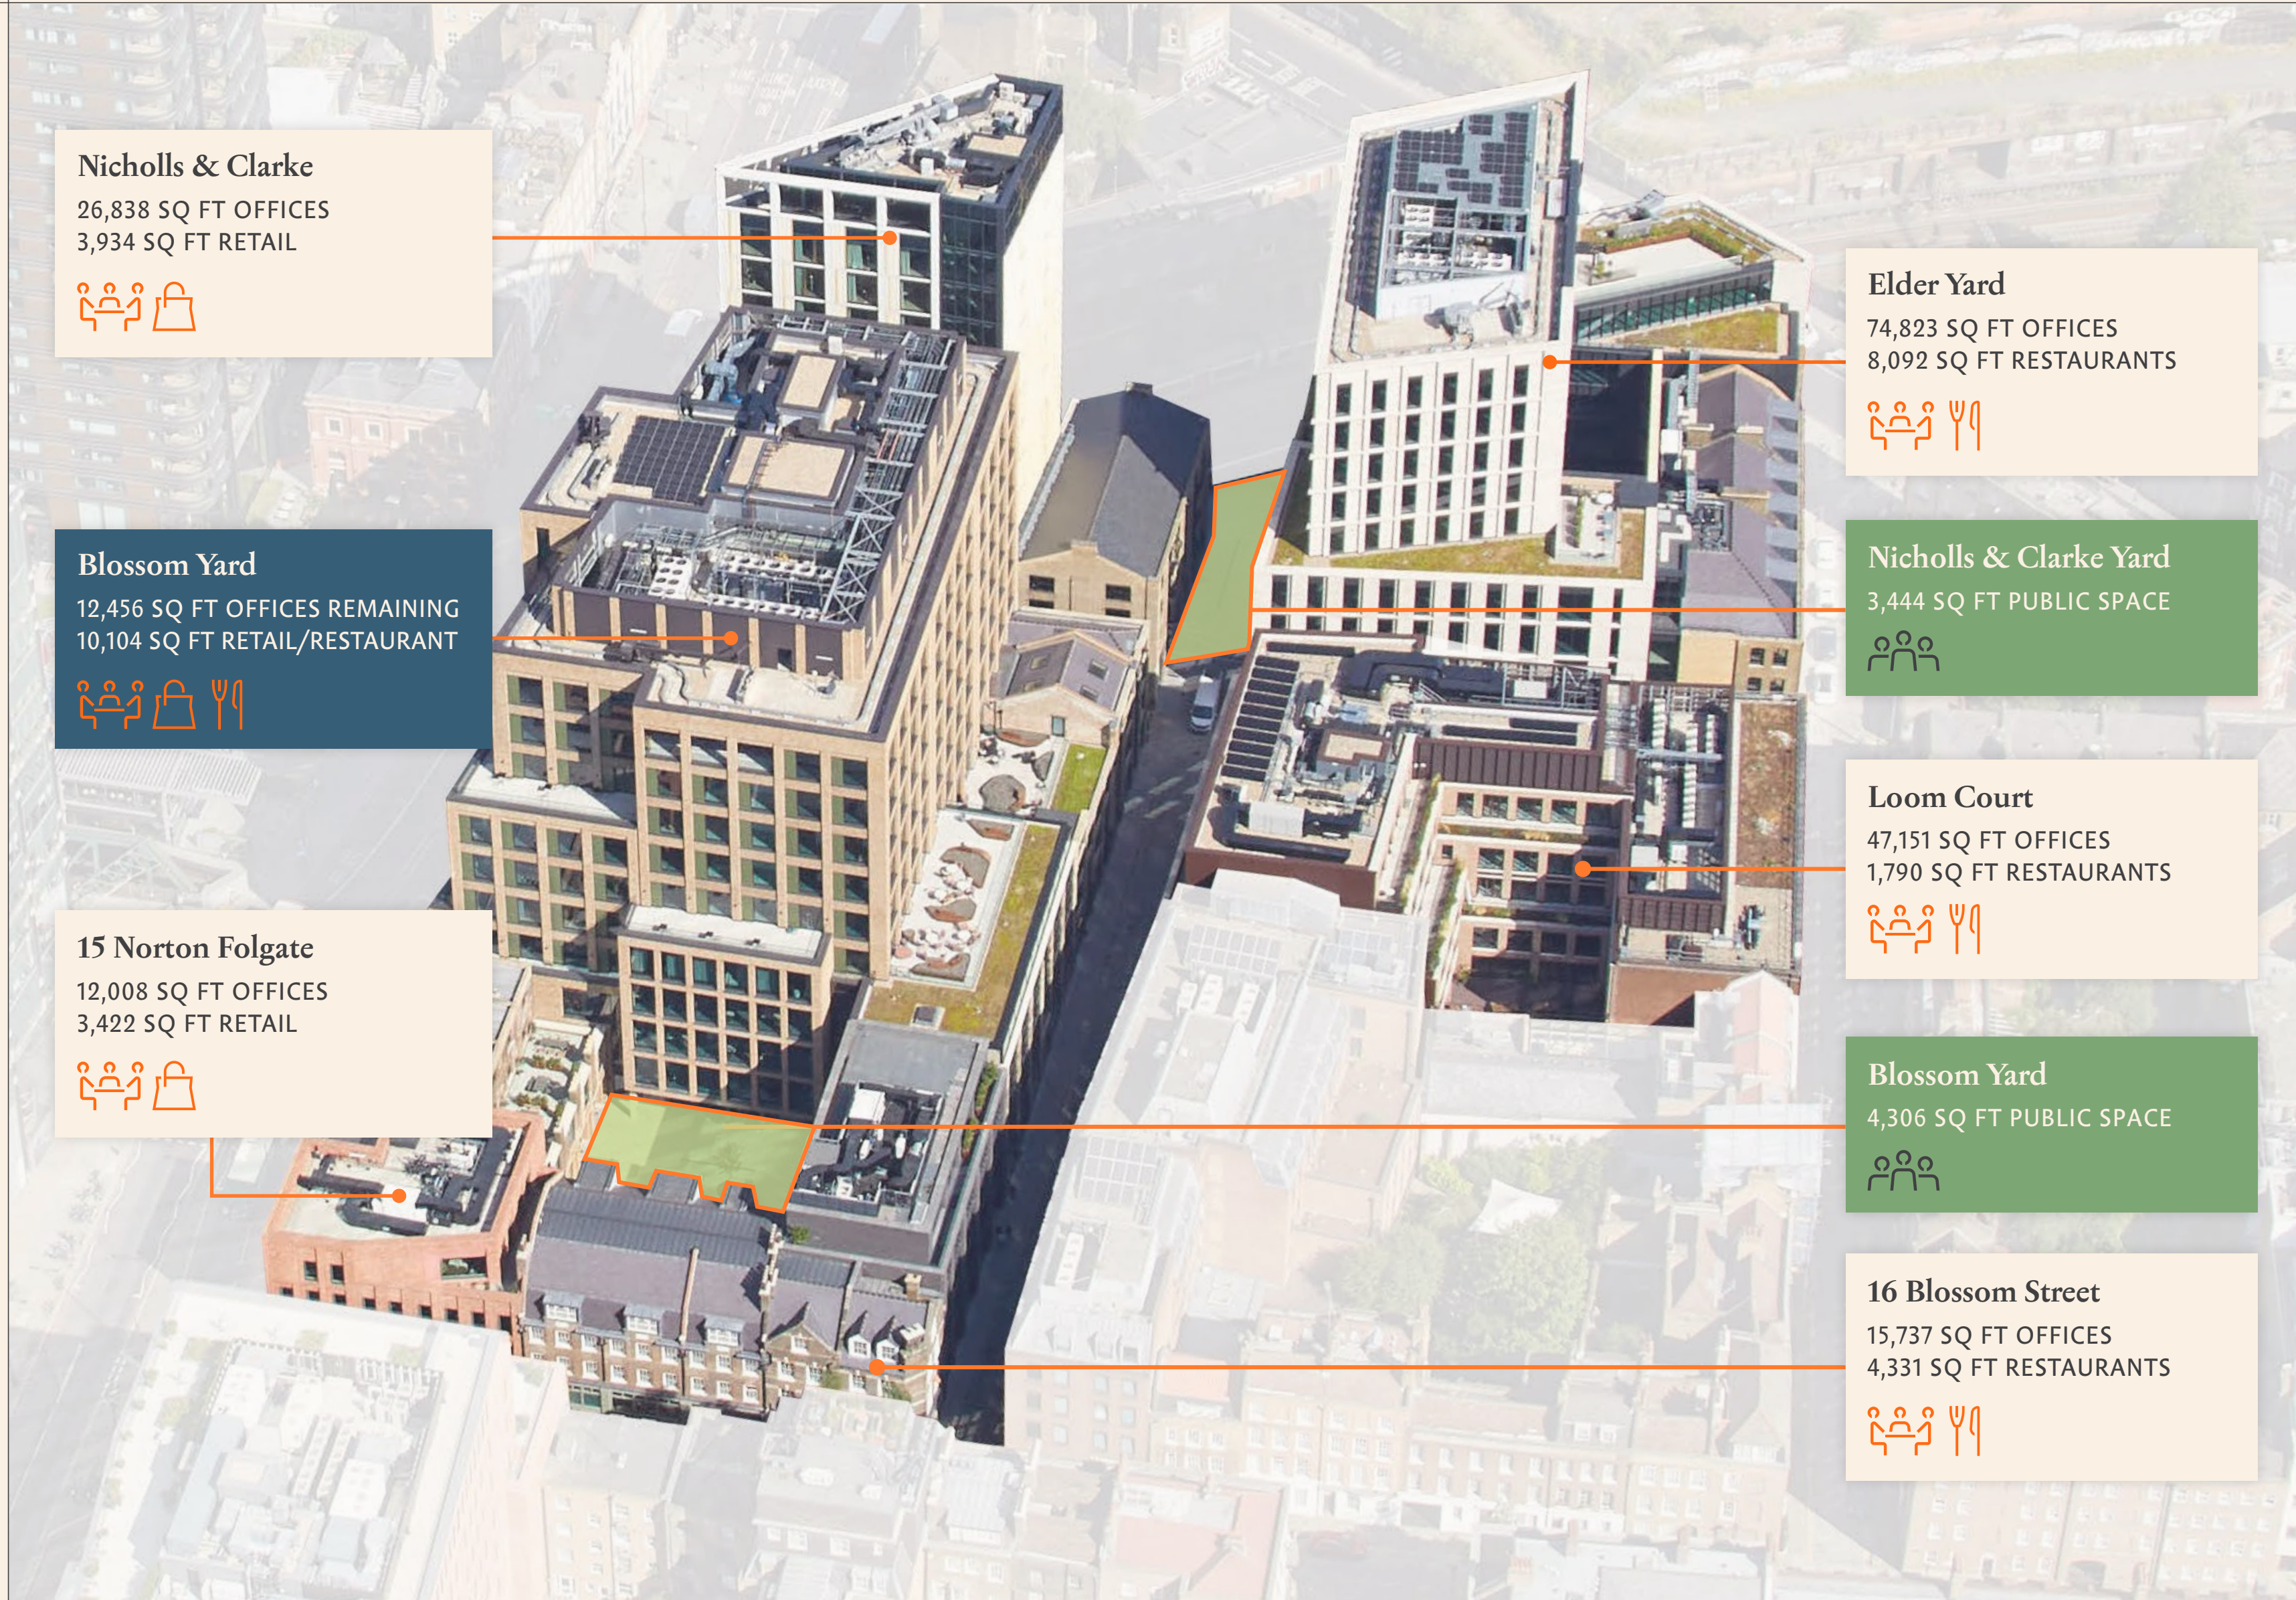

The area became notable once again as a hub for Georgian Huguenot silkweaving, and later as a prospering cluster of Victorian industry. Most recently, the neighbourhood is full of ambitious businesses and families, with numerous new retailers and restaurants appearing regularly.

From Spitalfields Market's eclectic vendors to culinary classics at Hawksmoor, inventive entrées from Ottolenghi or a proper pint in an east end pub, food, fashion and lifestyle trends frequently originate from these streets. It's an amazing place, not only just to work but to be.

A seamless blend of old and new

STIRLING PRIZE WINNING AHMM have beautifully restored the forgotten Victorian warehouses into a seamless blend of the old and new. The remaining floors are located in the prime top two floors of the new contemporary section of the building, with amazing views across spitalfields and the City.

BLOSSOM YARD sits at the heart of reimagined Norton Folgate, with a secluded courtyard entrance which feels a world from the hustle and bustle of Bishopsgate.
